A Premeditated Murder. The court of ass zes at Rome and all approaches to it were densely crowded on Monday, September 28, with persons wishing to witness the trial of Pietro Cardinalli, aged thirty-five, Autonietta Carrezza, aged twenty-four; and Raffaela Fadda, twenty five, concerned in the murder of Captaia Giovanni Fadda, the husband of the last named prisoner, on the 6th of Septem ber. This is one of those cases of terrible cold blooded, premeditated assassinations replete with the dramatic details so ofcen heard of in Italy, as compared with the more brutally vulgar characteristics of the majority of such erimes, even more frequently perpetrated in Esgland. Giovanni Fadda was a captain in the Thirty-second Infantry regiment, and had been seriously wounded in the groin at the battle of San Martino. A few years ago he married Signora Raffaela Saraceni at Naples. The union was an unhappy one; they separated, and the wife conceived a guilty passion for a circulaider and athlete, Pietro Cardinalli. To make a marriage with him possible, and to regain her dowry, which, according to the regulations of the Italian army, was vested in the hands of the military authorities, she incited Cardinail: to murder her hustand, and supplied him with several hundred france either for the purpose of an assassin er to provid for his own requirements in accomplishing the deed. He came to Rome, matured his place invented a stratagem for decoying the captain's orderly from his ledgings, and, imme diately returning, attacked him with a dagger, wounding him in a number of places, and then fled. followed as far as the door of the house by tis victim, who was just able to point out his assassin to the passers by when he fell dead. The murderer was taken red handed. The clue to the circumstances was quickly obtained, and Raffaela Fadda accused as the priccipal agent of the crime. Antonietta Carrezza, a mistress of Cardinalli's, as an accomplice before the deed, was arrested a few days afterward. The evidence against the two women was over-very great, and their curiosity was much remarked upon. THE WRITERS OF THE BIBLE, -- Moses wrote Genesis, Exodus, Levitions, Numbers and Den teronomy.

women were deeply moved, particularly Fadda's wife, who, it may be mentioned, is a model of ugliness. The number of ladies in court was
